In a small village of Punjab, India, Sultan Ali Khan lives with his pregnant wife Aarfa and his mother-in-law, Gulab Devi. Aarfa is the daughter of Sultan's father, Sultan Mohamad Khan. The family is poor and struggling financially. Aarfa suffers from lactose intolerance due to her previous pregnancy when she had a miscarriage shortly before giving birth to a girl child named Mariyam. During a fight with local goons, Aarfa goes into labour and is taken to the hospital by Sultan. She is informed by Dr. Anoop Verma that she will give birth to a baby girl. After giving birth to her daughter Mariyam, Aarfa is told by her mother-in-law that Sultan now has an heir to his royal title now and can have as many girls as he wants now. She is also told that her duty as a daughter-in-law is over now and she must sleep in another room from that moment onwards as she has fulfilled her duty of bearing a son for the family. Sultan returns home one day to find that Aarfa has left the house with his daughter. When he confronts her father, Sultan learns that Aarfa did not leave of her own accord but was thrown out of the house by Gulab Devi for shaming her family's honour by giving birth to a girl child. Geeta Malik, a worker in the government school who is also Sultan's childhood friend, calls him saying that she can meet him outside of school if he wants to talk about something important. Sultan tells her to call him at home. When he reaches home, he finds Aarfa there with his daughter. After an emotional talk together, Sultan learns that Aarfa was told by her mother-in-law that if they gave birth to another girl child, they will be thrown out of the house with the two girls. Sultan also learns that Aarfa had no say in the matter - she was simply told what they were to do. They then agree to leave the village without telling anyone and they start living in Geeta Malik's house. He soon gets a job as a bus driver for schoolchildren and moves out on his own after he gets engaged with Geeta Malik.
